

Guide to AY 122 Show & Tell

On intermediate dates between the start and completion of a given lab, class will begin with a round table discussion. This discussion, termed “Show & Tell,” will be facilitated by a different lab group each week. On weeks in which your group is tasked with leading discussion, you are required to meet with your fellow group members prior to class to decide on a list of potential discussion topics. These topics may include common sticking points, potential sources of error, and avenues for exploration outside of those in the lab handout. Your group should send around these topics no later than the day before class so that your fellow classmates can come prepared with useful insights for the day’s discussion. During class, each group member should take the lead on presenting a different discussion topic. Your group will be graded on the quality of your chosen discussion topics, the unique insights you bring to the discussion, and the degree to which you are able to stimulate class participation.